If your post isn't very good, or is posted at the wrong time, it's liable to get lost in the crush of content. Branded hashtags are hashtags you use to market specific programs, photos, contests, themes or other subsections of your brand. When you run an ad campaign, make a specific hashtag for it and encourage users to use it. Create a few long-term hashtags specific to your brand so you can further identify when users are engaged with your brand. Contests can easily be tracked through hashtags as well. Avoid overusing hashtags. If you're spamming several dozen tags on every post, you're going to look like you don't know how to use the platform. Treat them like keywords on your website; focus them but make sure to use them. Like the occasional post from your users, particularly if it interacts with your brand in some way. Identify the most influential people in your network and actively engage them in conversation. Your best advocates are the ones who truly care about your brand. Don't be afraid to express an opinion, as long as that opinion isn't likely to involve negative backlash. Regardless of the social media platform you're working with, it's important to have a consistent presence. Your online personality, logo, voice and even emotion should be the same no matter where your fans find you. That's pretty easy to do on Facebook, Twitter and Google+, but when it how do you get more likes on instagram comes to an entirely visual channel like Instagram, how can you do it? You want to be sure people can easily find and recognize you, so I suggest you use your logo as your Instagram profile picture and your company's full title as your username. The pictures you share should reflect your online voice and even the emotion your brand elicits (like the spirit of adventure associated with GoPro).
